What is a Health Promoting School?

A health Promoting School is a place where all members of the school community work together to promote the health and well-being of learners, educators, general staff, parents and the wider community. This international concept was adopted in South Africa in 1995.

The goal of HPS in south Africa is to facilitate the development of health promoting school in SA, so that they become sites for the optimal well-being and development of the communities they serve.

HPS does not compete with, or replace, other South African whole school development models. Rather it shares many of the same objectives, while it enables the particular growth of a school as a centre for health and well-being.

The 5 Key Components of HPS

- 1. Skills
- 2. Policies
- 3. Environment
- 4. Community
- 5. Services

The objective of the department is ensure that all schools are accredited to be Health Promoting School and it every citizen that should work towards ensuring that their catchment school is accredited.
