Child Protection week @ Stanger Hospital

The social workers at Stanger Hospital hosted a successful child protection campaign on the 1st of June 2016.

For the love that social workers and the Stanger Hospital staff at large have for children, they decided to embark on a child protection campaign where they were singing joyfully saying "masibathande abantwana bethu" which simply means "we must love our children" and they were giving out parcels of goodies to every child that was within the premises of the hospital.

The nurses together with social workers of Stanger Hospital took the initiative to go out to local clinics (kwaDukuza clinic, Groutville etc.) teaching the community about children's right and the importance of protecting the children from any forms of harmful behaviour to them. We strongly believe that parents or other caregivers are responsible for building a protective and loving home environment.

The campaign ended on a very good mode where all the posters that were designed stood a chance to be appreciated and the judges had to select the most attractive and creative one of them all. The first place was taken by physio department, second place was taken by supply chain and third place was given away to the Security department.
