Heritage day celebration at GJ Crookes Hospital

On the 20th of September 2013 the G.J Crookes Hospital embarked on a celebration of the hospital's diverse heritages. This was a day to celebrate cultural heritage and the diversity of various beliefs and traditions. All staff members had an opportunity to reflect on what our collective heritage actually is.

The aim was to enable people from different cultures and traditions to liaise with each other in an informal gathering.

Different cultures were represented with staff members dressed in their cultural clothes and singing cultural songs and performing cultural dances. Different entertainment items were also organized to celebrate the day,

All traditional food was served
